REFORESTING METHODS

Secretary Wilson to Spend Vacation Studying Tree Planting.

Washington, July 5.—Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture left Washington this afternoon expecting to be away from his office for six weeks.

Reforestation by artificial broadcast seed sowing. It is explained, is yet in its experimental stages.

Broadcast seed sowing has been tried in the mountains of Southern California, in the sand hills of Nebraska, in the Adirondacks and elsewhere.

In September following this first experimental sowing it was found to have been successful. The seedlings were thrifty, uniformly distributed and were from 1 1/2 to 2 inches high.

Encouraged by these results, the forest service continued similar experiments in the same region in the spring of 1906, when three hundred pounds of Western yellow pine seed were sown.

If this season's experiments are successful it is probable that this simple method of reforesting burned tracts can be extensively adopted throughout the greater part of the Black Hills National Forest.

Reforesting along old lines has proved expensive. The weather was unfavorable and results were not as successful as before.
